

U.S. Plans Swift Moves To Develop Firm China Policy

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6 — The United States planned today to move forward rapidly in developing an aggressive policy against the Communist sweep in the Far East.

Responsible sources said high foreign policy planners were anxious to eliminate the failure to save China and to eradicate the belief that China is forever lost to the Democratic world.

It was likewise anticipated that, once the White Paper on China has been more fully digested, congressional demands for a positive policy will arise. For the time being, officials are unwilling to discuss steps that might be taken to prevent the onrush of Communism into nations bordering China.

SECRETARY of State Dean Acheson keynoted this attitude when he refused to speculate on future courses of action open to the United States.

In so doing Acheson explained that he has a special study group reviewing the whole Far Eastern situation.

At present Acheson will go no further than lay down five basic points of American policy in the Far East.

They commit the United States to continue to work toward China's independence and advancement, to maintain basic rights and liberties, to consult with other interested powers on the Far Eastern problem, and to work through the United Nations to maintain peace and security.

Officials made clear that the United States has no intention of leading in the formation of a North Pacific alliance similar to the North Atlantic Pact at present.

THREE REASONS are given for this attitude. They are:

Eichelberger Says Island Chain Key To Red Advance In Far East

COLUMBUS, Aug. 6 — Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger declared today that the military defenses of Japan must be built up to stop Communism in the Far East.

The former Eighth Army commander, now a consultant on the Far East to Army Secretary Gray, told the Ohio American Legion convention that Japan has been reduced to a

"military pigmy." Eichelberger continued: "So long as Russia does not control the island chain and particularly the main islands of Japan, the further advancement of the Reds is to a very large extent stymied."

"And if we can make sure that the Japanese are reasonably able to protect themselves after a peace treaty is concluded, the scales will be tipped the other way."

"THAT IS WHY I consider Japan as the key to the entire Far Eastern situation at this time."

Eichelberger said many of the fruits of World War II victory have been wiped out, but contended that the Communists will be unable to consolidate their gains in China without aid from the West. He said:

"The Chinese are the small traders of the Far East. They will require international trade in order to live."

"Unless the Reds cease their hymn of hate and seek friendly commercial contacts, there will be chaos in China, and the Communists will be unable to impose their regime on the vast population."

Eichelberger attributed the Communist sweep over Asia to the destruction of Japanese military power, to war weariness among the followers of Chiang Kai-shek, and to low living standards which invite change.

"So long as a formidable Japanese army remained intact," he said, "the southward spread of Communism into China proper was effectively checkmated."

"When this barrier was removed, all of China lay open to ideological infiltration from the north in spite of wartime reinforcement of the Nationalist regime."

Mrs. Motschman Is On Spot On Legion Issue

There was one Pickaway County woman Saturday who had an unusually tough decision to make.

She was Mrs. Blanche Motschman, one of four delegates from Circleville American Legion post to the state Legion convention in Columbus.

Fuel Gas Rate Boost To Touch 2 County Towns

A proposed rate increase for the Ohio Fuel Gas Co. will not apply to Circleville, but boosts for the villages of Tarlton and Williamsport may be ahead.

Harry Metier, foreman here for Ohio Fuel, indicated Saturday that the proposed boost may be a long time in coming.

He explained that the matter first must receive approval from the Federal Power Commission and then by the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio.

The boost would hike Ohio Fuel's wholesale income by more than $1 million.

In one of the biggest rate boosts ever proposed to the Federal Power Commission, Ohio Fuel asked an increase of about 4.2 cents to a thousand cubic feet which would add up to an estimated $1,228,568 per year.

The total estimate is based on sales the company expects for the 12 months ending with Feb. 28 of 1950.

The company asked that the new rates go into effect Sept. 6.

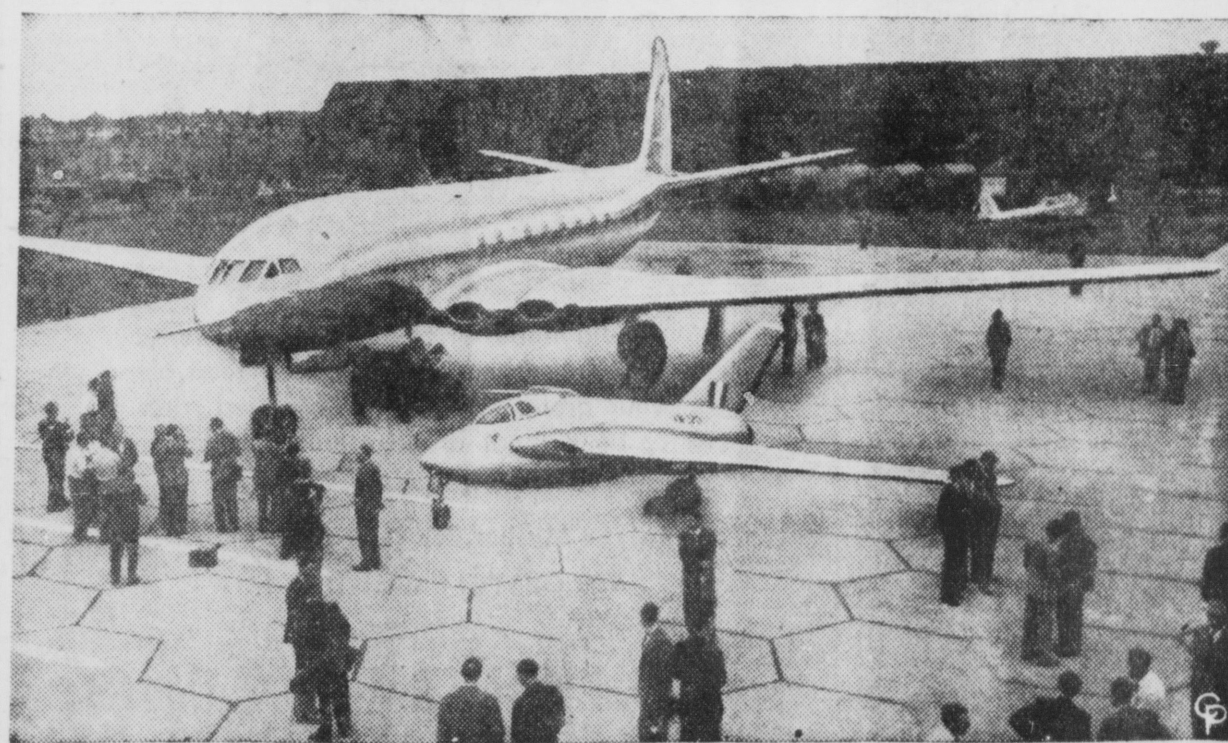

Three of the largest purchasers of gas supplies in Ohio would be affected along with many smaller companies. The Dayton Power and Light Co. would have to pay an additional $682,712 for gas, the Cincinnati Gas and Electric Co., $283,199, and the West Ohio Gas Co., $122,916.

These three big companies, like the two little Pickaway County villages, buy fuel gas from Ohio Fuel and retail it to consumers.

A company spokesman said the average 4.2 cent increase would make up the difference in price between the cost of supplying gas and revenues from wholesale buyers.

The rush is on to beat the Aug. 10 election filing deadline. Candidates filing on the Independent ticket for public offices in Pickaway County had reached 63 Saturday morning, according to records in the board of elections office.

3 Temblors Hit Central Ecuador

Hurricane Adds To Disaster

QUITO, Ecuador, Aug. 6 — A violent earthquake which almost totally destroyed Ambato, in Central Ecuador, left at least 300 persons dead today and several hundred others injured.

Rescuers pressed a search of the ruins of Ecuador's fifth largest city amid indications that the number of dead and wounded in the city of 19,000 will rise.

The three temblors that struck Ambato in a two-hour period yesterday seriously damaged the nearby towns of Latacunga and Salcedo, including other smaller villages in the vicinity.

A hurricane which hit the area almost simultaneously added to the list of injured and hampered communications and rescue work.

HARDLY A HOUSE was untouched by the tremors which struck at 3:06 p. m. and 3:10 p. m., followed by a third temblor at 5:15 p. m. which damaged buildings that escaped the first earth shock wave.

Many persons were killed and buried when buildings collapsed. Ambato's cathedral was totally destroyed, entombing a large number of people.

Fear of a new earthquake seized the inhabitants of the ruined city, but discipline was said to be excellent.

Ecuadoran Minister of Government Eduardo Salazar Gomez established headquarters near Ambato's fallen cathedral, and rearmend police and army units as a security precaution.

Food, blood plasma, tools and beds were sped to the city in several hundred private cars. A call was sent out for more coffins with which to bury the dead.

Both the Peruvian and Argentine governments offered help in the form of food and drugs.

Cities Listed Which Need Employment Bolstering

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6 — White House experts have listed a group of cities which urgently need federal contracts to bolster drooping business conditions.

This disclosure was made today by reliable government sources. They said Presidential Assistant John Steelman will name the cities in a letter to be addressed in federal department heads in the next few days.

The cities were selected after a study of unemployment rolls and other evidence of business trends.

Steelman will ask about 20 departmental and agency heads to try to channel contracts to those areas as a possible curb on rising unemployment and slumping business activity.

OFFICIALS declined to disclose the cities to be specified by Steelman, but it was reported that he may include several "labor market areas" where unemployment is considered serious.

Designated as such by the bureau of employment security, they are:

Unemployment in these areas totals 12 or more percent of the population. Meanwhile, there were these developments on the business front:

China Generals Deserting To Join Red Army

CANTON, Aug. 6—China's Nationalist government reeled today under a double blow—desertions of its generals and America's flat refusal to send more aid.

Government officials in Canton reacted bitterly to the developments which lessened hopes of halting the Communist sweep into South China.

Observers in Hong Kong said the Nationalists are rallying for a stand in Canton against invading Communist troops from the north, but added that the provincial capital may fall within a month.

The Nationalist turn-coat generals were reported switching to the Communists in the hope of obtaining privileged positions in a Red China.

The most serious desertion was Gen. Cheng Chien's sell-out to the Communists which resulted in the fall of strategic Changsha 350 miles north of Canton. Cheng's successor, Chen Ming Jen, also was reported to have gone over to the Communists.

On the heels of this news came the United States' White Paper blaming Russian interference and Nationalist incompetence for the Red victories in China.

Government Experiment in Foreign Seeds May Prove of Immense Value to Farmers

NEW GREENHOUSE of plant introduction station. Many plants are started here before transplanting outside in experimental plots. Director Hoover is looking over some of the new plants.

By CHARLES W. WHITE
 Central Press Correspondent
 AMES, Ia.—It looks about like any other greenhouse—maybe a little fancier and better kept than the ones you see at the edge of most Midwest towns.

However, the glass-enclosed workshop of Dr. M. M. Hoover, United States Department of Agriculture scientist here, is one of the really unusual places in this world.

It contains a collection of more than 2,500 different kinds of foreign seeds from which experimental plants are growing, and which may eventually be worth untold millions to American agriculture, particularly that of the great Middle West breadbasket country.

It's called a "plant introduction station," where plants and seeds come from such far away places as Guatemala, Mexico, Argentina, India and Turkey. United States government teams have been collecting these plants, as well as 12,000 packets of seeds, for several years under the Research and Marketing Act passed by Congress in 1946, according to authorities here.

How does this affect the Midwest farmer?

For example, nearly every plant product now grown on farms is the product of breeding and cross-breeding former varieties that failed to live up to expectations for one reason or another.

AT THE University of Illinois, for instance, farm scientists have specialized in wheat, producing a variety that is highly resistant to costly plant diseases. Many Midwest universities are working on that old favorite, corn.

Hybrid corn has already revolutionized this phase of the farm industry, with farmers getting twice as many bushels from an acre as before. Plant breeding also involves bringing so-called "weed" types into practical use—for which an example might be the famous "Kentucky 31" grass developed by the University of Kentucky, and which is now helping to conquer the South's serious erosion problem.

It was developed from ordinary pasture-type fescue found growing on the Kentucky hill farm of William Suiter about 40 years ago.

In plant introduction stations, such as the one at Iowa State college, the process is merely refined and expanded. They find more new types, and more possible "crosses" to make better products here at home.

"The plants cover almost every category that might be useful to agriculture," according to Ned Disque, of Iowa State.

"Many of them, such as the legumes, have foreign or scientific

M. M. HOOVER, plant introduction station director, examines Turkish legume which may some day rival alfalfa in the corn belt area.

names, but in a general way they resemble the types of legumes we have in this country, such as potatoes; cereals such as wheat, rye, barley, and the like; corn (200 different kinds); vegetables, onions, squash, tomatoes, castor beans, sorghum, watermelons, ornamental bushes of various kinds, and even trees."

It is too early to know just what plants will be most useful and profitable to the farmer, authorities here say. The program is only a little more than two years old. First, teams had to be sent out to collect the seed and plants.

Now the plants and seeds are being processed and sent to the plant introduction stations, such as this one at Dr. Hoover's. At stations such as this, the plants are grown and increased.

Then they will be sent to state experiment stations—such as Ohio State or Purdue university farms. At the big experimental farms the new plants get their chance to prove whether they will be better on American farms than similar products already grown.

"In other words, it may be anywhere from a year or two up to 25 years or more from now that we will know which of these plants has real value to our cornbelt agriculture," Disque says.

Iowa State has been designated as regional station for the North Central States of Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio and Indiana.

Not all of the new stuff will be grown at Iowa State—potatoes, for instance, will be grown near Sturgeon Bay on the Door peninsula in Wisconsin, and some cereals are being tested at the University of Minnesota.

Most of the smaller Iowa plants are in a four-acre field near the new greenhouse. A 15-acre field contains squash, sunflowers, tomatoes, castor beans, sorghum and other plants.

Another Attempt Made To Kill Spain's Franco

MADRID, Aug. 6—Snipers fired three shots yesterday at a motorcade led by Francisco Franco's armored auto in the latest attempt on the Spanish leader's life.

The caudillo had just left Ponferrada where he had officiated at the dedication of a new power plant and was enroute to his Summer seat of government at San Sebastian.

Reliable sources revealed that the shots were fired at some distance from the road by persons concealed in the rocky mountainside.

It was not learned whether the bullets actually struck any of the cars in the caravan. Members of the Spanish state police determined that the bullets were fired from Mauser rifles.

Recently a bomb was exploded near a Barcelona church which Franco had been scheduled to visit and a short time ago other bombs believed earmarked for the caudillo were found in Madrid.

ment similar to that being made in Europe.

2. The dangers in the Far East are not comparable to those in Europe, where millions of Russian and satellite troops are massed in a position to strike.

3. Any Pacific arrangement must be formulated by the Pacific powers themselves. If they can make a case for United States aid, it might be considered.

The aloof attitude of the United States toward a Pacific defense arrangement is demonstrated by the arrangements for the coming visit of President Elpidio Quirino of the Philippines.

Quirino is a special matter of interest to the State Department because of his moves in developing a Pacific alliance.

But according to the schedule worked out for him he will have little opportunity to discuss the matter with Acheson.

The latter does not plan to meet the Philippine president at the airport or make any private engagements with him.

This coolness is ascribable largely to Quirino's taking the initiative in discussing a Pacific pact with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek in Baguio, P. I.

China Generals Deserting To Join Red Army

CANTON, Aug. 6 — China's Nationalist government reeled today under a double blow—desertions of its generals and America's flat refusal to send more aid.

Government officials in Canton reacted bitterly to the developments which lessened hopes of halting the Communist sweep into South China.

Observers in Hong Kong said the Nationalists are rallying for a stand in Canton against invading Communist troops from the north, but added that the provincial capital may fall within a month.

The Nationalist turn-coat generals were reported switching to the Communists in the hope of obtaining privileged positions in a Red China.

The most serious desertion was Gen. Cheng Chien's sell-out to the Communists which resulted in the fall of strategic Changsha 350 miles north of Canton. Cheng's successor, Chen Ming Jen, also was reported to have gone over to the Communists.

On the heels of this news came the United States' White Paper blaming Russian interference and Nationalist incompetence for the Red victories in China.

Government Experiment in Foreign Seeds May Prove of Immense Value to Farmers

NEW GREENHOUSE of plant introduction station. Many plants are started here before transplanting outside in experimental plots. Director Hoover is looking over some of the new plants.

By CHARLES W. WHITE
Central Press Correspondent
AMES, Ia.—It looks about like any other greenhouse—maybe a little fancier and better kept than the ones you see at the edge of most Midwest towns.

However, the glass-enclosed workshop of Dr. M. M. Hoover, United States Department of Agriculture scientist here, is one of the really unusual places in this world.

It contains a collection of more than 2,500 different kinds of foreign seeds from which experimental plants are growing, and which may eventually be worth untold millions to American agriculture, particularly that of the great Middle West breadbasket country.

It's called a "plant introduction station," where plants and seeds come from such far away places as Guatemala, Mexico, Argentina, India and Turkey. United States government teams have been collecting these plants, as well as 12,000 packets of seeds, for several years under the Research and Marketing Act passed by Congress in 1946, according to authorities here.

They gave as their reason: "the housing problem."

The proposal about the ladies, incidentally, died in committee in 1947 and 1948, so it may never see the light of day.

Anti-Syphilis Drive Readied

Circleville soon will be flooded with matchbooks asking that syphilis be wiped out in Ohio.

Dr. A. D. Blackburn, Pickaway County health commissioner, said that both city and county health offices have received several thousand matchbooks bearing anti-syphilis warnings.

The match books are part of an intensive drive begun by the state department of health in an effort to stamp out the disease, according to the doctor.

Blackburn said the matches would be distributed in all offices of the courthouse and in up-town business places.

Ohio Church Opens Bank, But Finds Luck Is Bad

One point in the history of religion in Ohio is the case of the church that started a bank and didn't have such good luck. Not only did the bank go under, but the denomination itself was virtually wiped out in Ohio. The church was backed by the Mormons.

Utah is usually considered the stronghold of the Mormons, but what is not so commonly known is that Ohio was in a sense Mormonism's testing ground.

A few miles east of Cleveland is Kirtland, home of the first Mormon temple in Ohio. It was on Feb. 3, 1831, that Joseph Smith and a small band of his followers arrived in Kirtland. Joseph Smith claimed that he had found gold engraved plates which contained direct messages from God.

Then he also found a special pair of spectacles that enabled him to read and translate these plates. That was the beginning of the new religion that Smith started in New York state.

Sidney Rigdon was a friend of Smith and a very capable preacher, who soon developed a good-sized following. His followers pooled all of their goods and lived in a communal society. Many converts were won for this new group.

But they were not without their opposition. When Smith and Rigdon tried to convert the town of Hiram, they ran into some stiff obstacles. The people of Hiram stripped them, scraped them over icy ground, thoroughly tarred their bodies including the hair and the inside of their mouths and put them in a sack of feathers.

Smith was quite undaunted by it all. He somehow got the tar and feathers all off and preached again the following Sunday morning before his congregation. Rigdon went insane for a time. But these little episodes did not dampen their enthusiasm. People from all over the world flocked to Kirtland, turned all their wealth over to the man who claimed to be the prophet of God, and joined the communal group.

The project was so successful that the leaders decided to start a bank. Even though the state refused to grant a charter, Smith went ahead on his own and organized the Kirtland Safety Society Bank, and named himself the cashier and Rigdon the president.

That was the beginning of the end. The state took legal action against the bank and it failed. The people were so angry against Smith and Rigdon that they would not even accept their spiritual authority. Again Smith was tarred and he and Rigdon had to flee.

The group that remained behind in Kirtland reorganized and broke with some of the peculiar customs of the earlier Mormons. The early Mormons had accepted polygamy, but the reorganized group did away with that.

Perhaps this incident in the history of religion in Ohio will add but little argument to the debate of whether preachers should meddle in money matters. It is quite safe to assume however, that had Smith been content to be a preacher instead of trying to be a banker, also, Ohio might be the center of Mormonism today instead of Utah. . . . And Smith might have saved himself the bother of scraping off tar and feathers.

Elinor Williams' Teen Tips

"What do you do when you can't mix with the crowd? When, if you go to parties, the crowd continually moves off each time you approach? When you're not able to think of smart things—or anything at all—to say?" asks a teen girl.

"I'm 14 and a freshman in high school. I haven't an inferiority complex but I do wish I had a smattering of character and personality!"

1—Do everything possible to make your appearance neat, clean and attractive. Then forget it and think about other people.

2—Smile often. Try to look lively and friendly, yet casual. Put friendliness across by being interested in others. Begin with a friendly smile and "Hi!" when you meet boys and girls you know or have seen at school. A simple question about a class assignment will eventually follow that friendly "Hello!" with a little effort. When you see another girl who is shy, go and talk with her.

3—Join school clubs and student groups. It's surprising what fun you'll find in club meetings and laboratories. It's easy to get acquainted when you're working together.

4—You don't have to wait for boys to find out what a nice girl and good sport you are. They can't tell that if they don't know you, so give them a chance to get to know you. If you see someone you like, plan a double-date at your house and invite him, go to class when he does and leave the club meeting when he does, so he'll walk home with you. Ask him about your algebra assignment.

5—Get several lively girls and boys together for a hike, picnic or for a snack at your house after a game. This will encourage dates and fun.

For help with personal problems, write to Elinor Williams in care of The Circleville Herald, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Household Hints

To separate drinking glasses which stick together after washing, try putting some ice cubes inside the inner glass and running warm water over the outside. This will cause the inner glass to contract, the outer one to expand, when it should be possible to get them apart.

To make French chili dressing, measure into a half pt. jar 6 tsp. salad oil, 1-3 tsp. salt, 1-4 tsp. paprika, 1-8 tsp. pepper, 1 tsp. cider or wine vinegar, 1/2 tsp. garlic salt and 2 tsp. chili sauce. Shake vigorously until blended.

Psalms Give Thanks to God

ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Scripture—Psalms 92; 103; 136:1-9, 25, 26.

By Alfred J. Buescher

It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, upon an instrument of strings, for Thou, O Lord, hast made me glad through Thy work.

Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him. For He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust.

As for man, his days are as grass, for the wind passeth over it and it is gone; but the mercy of the Lord endureth forever.

O give thanks unto the Lord; to Him that made the moon and stars to shine by night, the moon and stars to shine. MEMORY VERSE—Psalm 92:1.

Ohio Church Opens Bank, But Finds Luck Is Bad

One point in the history of religion in Ohio is the case of the church that started a bank and didn't have such good luck. Not only did the bank go under, but the denomination itself was virtually wiped out in Ohio. The church was backed by the Mormons.

Utah is usually considered the stronghold of the Mormons, but what is not so commonly known is that Ohio was in a sense Mormonism's testing ground.

A few miles east of Cleveland is Kirtland, home of the first Mormon temple in Ohio. It was on Feb. 3, 1831, that Joseph Smith and a small band of his followers arrived in Kirtland. Joseph Smith claimed that he had found gold engraved plates which contained direct messages from God.

Then he also found a special pair of spectacles that enabled him to read and translate these plates. That was the beginning of the new religion that Smith started in New York state.

Sidney Rigdon was a friend of Smith and a very capable preacher, who soon developed a good-sized following. His followers pooled all of their goods and lived in a communal society. Many converts were won for this new group.

But they were not without their opposition. When Smith and Rigdon tried to convert the town of Hiram, they ran into some stiff obstacles. The people of Hiram stripped them, scraped them over icy ground, thoroughly tarred their bodies including the hair and the inside of their mouths and put them in a sack of feathers.

Smith was quite undaunted by it all. He somehow got the tar and feathers all off and preached again the following Sunday morning before his congregation.

Rigdon went insane for a time. But these little episodes did not dampen their enthusiasm. People from all over the world flocked to Kirtland, turned all their wealth over to the man who claimed to be the prophet of God, and joined the communal group.

The project was so successful that the leaders decided to start a bank. Even though the state refused to grant a charter, Smith went ahead on his own and organized the Kirtland Safety Society Bank, and named himself the cashier and Rigdon the president.

That was the beginning of the end. The state took legal action against the bank and it failed. The people were so angered against Smith and Rigdon that they would not even accept their spiritual authority. Again Smith was tarred and he and Rigdon had to flee.

The group that remained behind in Kirtland reorganized and broke with some of the peculiar customs of the earlier Mormons. The early Mormons had accepted polygamy, but the reorganized group did away with that.

Elinor Williams' Teen Tips

"What do you do when you can't mix with the crowd? When, if you go to parties, the crowd continually moves off each time you approach? When you're not able to think of smart things—or anything at all—to say?" asks a teen girl.

"I'm 14 and a freshman in high school. I haven't an inferiority complex but I do wish I had a smattering of character and personality!"

1—Do everything possible to make your appearance neat, clean and attractive. Then forget it and think about other people.

2—Smile often. Try to look lively and friendly, yet casual. Put friendliness across by being interested in others. Begin with a friendly smile and "Hi!" when you meet boys and girls you know or have seen at school. A simple question about a class assignment will eventually follow that friendly "Hello!" with a little effort. When you see another girl who is shy, go and talk with her.

3—Join school clubs and student groups. It's surprising what fun you'll find in club meetings and laboratories. It's easy to get acquainted when you're working together.

4—You don't have to wait for boys to find out what a nice girl and good sport you are. They can't tell that if they don't know you, so give them a chance to get to know you. If you see someone you like, plan a double-date at your house and invite him, go to class when he does and leave the club meeting when he does, so he'll walk home with you. Ask him about your algebra assignment.

5—Get several lively girls and boys together for a hike, picnic or for a snack at your house after a game. This will encourage dates and fun.

For help with personal problems, write to Elinor Williams in care of The Circleville Herald, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Household Hints

To separate drinking glasses which stick together after washing, try putting some ice cubes inside the inner glass and running warm water over the outside. This will cause the inner glass to contract, the outer one to expand, when it should be possible to get them apart.

To make French chili dressing, measure into a half pt. jar 6 tbsp. salad oil, 1-3 tsp. salt, 1-4 tsp. paprika, 1-8 tsp. pepper, 1 tsp. cider or wine vinegar, 1/2 tsp. garlic salt and 2 tbsp. chili sauce. Shake vigorously until blended.

Psalms Give Thanks to God

It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, on an instrument of strings, for Thou, O Lord, hast made me glad through Thy work.

Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him. For He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust.

As for man, his days are as grass, for the wind passeth over it and it is gone; but the mercy of the Lord endureth forever.

O give thanks unto the Lord; to Him that made the moon and stars to shine by night. The moon and stars praise His name forever. MEMORY VERSE—Psalm 92:1.

INDONESIAN SETTLEMENT

FOR THE third time in four years, the Dutch and the Indonesians have agreed to stop shooting at each other. There seems to be a generally optimistic acceptance of the third agreement as the charmed one which will lead to a successful termination of the war in Indonesia.

There seems also to be general belief that a new nation, the United States of Indonesia, is about to come into being. It is reported both in Batavia, where the agreement was signed, and in Lake Success, the United Nations headquarters, that the Netherlands is ready to set up the long-promised federated government, and grant it full sovereignty. That step would be expected to end the Indonesian war, but probably nothing short of it would do so. The Indonesian Republicans have fought through four bitter years for their own sovereignty, and now are not likely to turn aside for any lesser prize. A free Indonesia, of which the Republican territory presumably would be a part, would have to offer very real freedom.

If this should come to pass, the once mighty Dutch empire would enter a new stage, bearing a resemblance to the British Commonwealth of Nations, which likewise evolved from a one-time colonial empire. The world moves on toward greater freedom and dignity for the individual. Nations and powers which recognize the movement and take part in it can grow with it. Those which oppose it are doomed.

SOLID FOUNDATION

AMONG the optimistic reports which play down the fears of possible depression in our present-day economy is one put out by the Twentieth Century Fund, based on a general survey of economic conditions in America. It says:

"For the long pull, we can see that both boom and bust are passing phases in the steady record of our long-term advance. Wherever we may stand at any given moment, in boom or depression, or at any point in between, we should remember our tremendous underlying strength. We can expand."

Our immense power to produce is sufficient to provide, by 1960, adequate standards of food, housing, education and medical care for every American, according to this report. Surface disturbances and temporary upsets cannot permanently undermine our prosperity, although those who are out of employment may find it hard to maintain this philosophical outlook. Optimism for the future is justified, however, only if we keep in mind the goal of adequate standards for all.

Pages From the Diary of An Antiquated Reporter:

Let's dig a little deeper into this noisy and speedy truck situation. Every since last Saturday when the scrivener fired the opening gun in a fight intended to correct an intolerable situation, citizens by the scores have been volunteering for any helpful action. Not yet are their services needed, but if the time comes they will be called and will respond.

At city hall and the courthouse the attitude seems to be that the problem is that of the State Highway Patrol. This we dispute. The problem is entirely within our own house, and we have sufficient authority in both city and county to bring about a solution. Yet this authority rests dormant while overloaded trucks speed through our midst and roar defiance. You haven't read lately about arrest of even a single truck driver, have you? You may not for a little while yet, but you will.

Our Chamber of Commerce is promoting a plan to widen the highway between Circleville and Chillicothe. The Herald withholds its support from this program until such a time as it is demonstrated that we can handle such highway and street traffic as we have now. We are not interested in doubling the truck traffic through town. We have entirely too much right now. For instance, between the hours of 7:30 and 9:30 Wednesday evening 98 trucks passed The Herald office on Court street And at one time during that period nine trucks were halted between Watt and High street waiting for a light to change. Not a single automobile in the block. No room for them.

Don't vent your anger against the drivers of the trucks. They must tool the rigs that are turned over to them. They have no choice at all. The real offenders are the truck owners. The trucks are noisy because gasoline mileage is better on a big motor with unconfined roar. Mufflers that will do an adequate job are available. Ask your garage man. Speed is necessary because of time limits placed on all hauls. If a driver fails to meet schedules he soon is out of a job. And the driver has nothing to say about the loads hauled. One went through here about ten days ago complaining because his load was 75 tons. Any motor would grunt and groan under such a load. The Ohio limit is 39 tons.

And what do you think those trucks are doing to your streets and highways? Plenty! And who is footing the bill? Maybe the ad run a few days ago by the Norfolk Western, a real taxpayer in Pickaway county, has the answer. It set forth that the general taxpayer is footing 48 percent of the cost of building and maintaining public roads; passenger car owners pay 34½ percent;

These Days

The Taft-Hartley Act is the law of the land and remains so until it is changed or renounced by Congress or is declared unconstitutional, in whole or in part, by the Supreme Court of the United States.

President Truman dislikes the Taft-Hartley Act and has sought to have it replaced by another law. This the Congress has thus far refused to do. In an orderly government, the law is the law, to be enforced whether a President likes it or not.

After all, if each law enforcement officer pursued his private predilections, we should have not a government of law but of whim culminating in anarchy.

However, the President appointed a fact-finding committee consisting of three men, Prof. Carroll R. Daugherty, Samuel Rosenman, and David L. Cole, to discover whether the demands of the CIO Steelworkers Union are justified. By this device, he bypassed the Taft-Hartley Act, which is obnoxious to him. He instructed this committee to report in 45 days "with recommendations as to fair and equitable terms of settlement." The Taft-Hartley Act, which permits the President to appoint a board, does not permit the board to make recommendations but only to state the facts so that the issues will be clarified.

By the President's method, three men are enabled, almost without recourse, to establish the pattern of American economy for the next generation. For as steel goes, so must go all American industry.

What may happen is that wages will be raised and the value of the dollar further depreciated. This comes at a time of unemployment, of reduced purchases, and when profits, no matter how large they may have been or appeared to be, are falling. The danger is that an unrealistic approach to our economy may damage it beyond repair, as British Socialism, even though protected by American aid, brings Britain every year closer to bankruptcy.

This is not a matter for violent propaganda either by the steel companies, who naturally do not favor the increase, or by the unions, who are intent upon making hay before the depression is too deep.

Two factors enter into this picture: One is the cost of living; the other is the ability to pay.

The cost of living rises as the real value of the dollar depreciates. As wages go up, prices go up and the value of the dollar goes down. The CIO view is that wages should go up but not prices and they have retained Robert Nathan to prove that that is possible.

The steel people contend that they cannot raise wages without being forced to produce steel at a loss—and when they have to do that, they will shut down. Some of the CIO leaders insist that that is unimportant. What they mean is that if the steel manufacturers shut down, the government can take over their plants or erect plants of its own.

The question of the ability to pay is a very involved one. Some contend that if an industry is earning plentifully, it should pay high wages and profits; that it should not set up reserves either for replacements or expansion or for bad years. In fact, they contend that should bad years come, industry can borrow from the government. It is deficit financing applied to business.

DIET AND HEALTH

First Drug to Treat Dread TB

By HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

WITH the advent of streptomycin, medicine gained its first drug remedy against certain types of tuberculosis. And yet, useful as it is, streptomycin is only partially victorious against the germs which cause this dread disease. Although almost miraculously effective in some cases, it is, sadly enough, without value in others.

Streptomycin is one of our growing number of antibiotics, of which penicillin is perhaps the best known. These substances act to restore health either by checking the growth of germs or by killing them outright. The great amount of work done with streptomycin indicates that it is effective only in certain stages of the disease and against certain strains of tuberculosis germs.

Most Effective

Streptomycin is most effective where the disease itself is most active, in tubercular infections which are discovered early and which are fairly extensive and progressing rapidly. It is especially helpful in cases of acute tuberculous pneumonia which spreads rapidly through the lungs or in cases of longer standing where there are areas of great destruction in the lungs. Even in these cases streptomycin is not of indefinite benefit; after a few months, the tuberculosis germs seem to become resistant to it. For this reason it is essential that streptomycin be given during the time when the germs are most susceptible to its action.

Streptomycin seems to be best used as an aid to other forms of treatment, and is particularly helpful when given after collapse therapy, that is, the injection of air into the chest cavity to collapse the lung. The lung may also be collapsed by surgical measures.

The use of streptomycin would not appear to be advisable in chronic cases of tuberculosis where a great deal of scar tissue has formed, nor does it as yet seem to be of any value when the condition has progressed to a late stage. It is also apparent that it should not be employed in early, slight infections.

Tuberculosis may also affect the larynx or voice box, the bronchi, the trachea or windpipe, as well as the bowels and ears. In these cases, streptomycin is of value and is given by injection into a muscle.

Draining Area

In the treatment of draining areas, such as the lymph glands in the neck which have been involved with tuberculosis, streptomycin may be employed, together with surgery.

In tuberculosis of the bones, joints and cartilages, the use of streptomycin is advised.

Tuberculosis may also affect the lining membrane over the brain. This condition is known as tuberculous meningitis and is at times treated with streptomycin if treatment is started early and continued over a period of from four to six months.

Thus, in many forms of tuberculosis, streptomycin has been found of value and even life-saving.

CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT

IT'S ALL over, Marvell realized, as people rose around him and rose and moved about the aisle. He stood aside; should he try to follow him out to the chaste stateroom on Chestnut Hill? He had never felt so aimless.

"Marvell . . ." It was Emily. She was not wearing black, but a light heather-colored suit and hat that reminded him of a faded lilac bush.

"Why, Emily," he said, taking her hand, waiting for the tears. "How nice of you to come," she said, as if he were one of those old-fashioned "at homes" when she and Elizabeth had kept their hats on in their own house all day.

As he murmured words of sympathy, she nodded her head, the lavender feathers in her hat rustling against her veil like dried plumes of lilac in the wind. What had become of her emotional overflow? Her eyes used to fill up as quickly as Alice Ben Bolt.

"Won't you drive back to the house with us? I want you to meet Bradford. He's at home." "Thank you." He was rather dazed. Ben must have put her up to it.

They drove home together, Emily and a pleasant sister of hers from Cambridge, and Marvell. He listened while Emily talked and her amiable sister sighed and chuckled in sympathy. "There won't be a service at the cemetery. At least not a formal one. Cremation, you see. That was his wish. He was ill only two days, you know. And I think that was what he minded most, to be taken so unawares."

Marvell nodded. He understood just how he must have felt. "How is Katherine, Marvell? She must be a big girl. Is she still at home?"

"Very well, she wanted to come with me today but I . . ." "Quite right of you. Let our children always remember us alive and well. Bradford is especially sensitive, so I insisted he remain at the house."

"It was last June, wasn't it, that she graduated? I'd like to have seen her in the play. Fanny sent me notices in the paper. Her first important occasion, it was very remiss of me not to have given her something in remembrance. I shall send her something now."

"Better make it a wedding present," said Marvell.

"Oh, how nice! Is it a Harvard boy?"

"He meant to be, but he went to war instead." "Too bad, but aren't we grateful that we'll never have war again? Ah, here we are."

There was no crape on the door. The front hall was as dim as ever. The draft from the back hallway was as strong. He filed noiselessly up the wide plushy stairs guided by memory and the light plumes of Emily's hat. The amiable sister continued to the third floor, exchanging a few words about coming down later for tea.

Before he entered the library, Marvell knew that nothing would be changed. The red curtains were drawn back, the coal fire laid in the grate, the brass desk lamp was placed at the same angle. Not a picture, not a paper knife had been disturbed. Emily maneuvered him into an easy chair. He was terribly aware of Proctor. He might come in at any moment. He had been reading "The White Monkey" and had been called away. The book, with a marker, lay on the small table at Marvell's side.

"You look so well, Marvell. Ben and Fanny told me. But it is good to see for myself. You've changed. Then, we're all older, aren't we?" Was it ten years or only yesterday that he had stood in this room, Marvell wondered.

"Bradford will be eleven next spring. Here is his picture." She lifted it from Proctor's desk. Marvell looked at the fair-haired plump little boy, exceedingly cheerful. It might have been the steel rimmed glasses that made him appear rather wise.

"Fine, he looks older, though." "He goes to a progressive school," she said proudly. "He's very talented."

"For what?" Marvell was interested. "Why—for everything now." She tried to be modest. "I mean he picks out his own tunes on the piano. He makes pictures. He loves color." She wrinkled her nose at the room. "He never liked this, it's so dark and still."

"But he hasn't made any special choice yet and I wanted to talk to you before he comes down to tea." Marvell turned his head toward the door, surely he had heard the handle turn.

"He has no head for figures or detail. He is so absorbed by what he sees and hears and touches. I believe he will be an artist. At ten, you can be pretty sure what the twig will be. Don't you agree?"

Marvell smiled, not without a touch of superiority. Emily had a few things yet to learn. Wait till the boy was eighteen, he might make a master plumber and knock the breath out of her.

"I don't want him to go into business. Nor even to Harvard. I want him to find his native at- mosphere now, day by day, not to be pushed into it at twenty."

Marvell had never thought Emily so observing. "What do you mean to do?"

"Next year, I wouldn't take him from school now, I'm going to take him abroad, to France."

What was the affinity between Back Bay and France, Marvell wanted to know, thinking of Nedda and Amory.

"Because—now you mustn't laugh—he won't be self-conscious about his talent. Even if it is a small one." She looked as if she were trusting him with a secret.

"What do you think?" Marvell was fidgety. He had no opinion; even if he had, he would never be bold enough to give it. Not any more, he thought grimly. "It sounds fine."

"You remember how Father Barlow arranged everything?" Her gray suede pumps rubbed the carpet a little nervously. When Marvell made no reply, she went on. "Trusts, you know, for the heirs, managed by Ben and some bank, or was it a judge . . ."

Pages From the Diary of An Antiquated Reporter:

Let's dig a little deeper into this noisy and speedy truck situation. Every since last Saturday when the scriveners fired the opening gun in a fight intended to correct an intolerable situation, citizens by the scores have been volunteering for any helpful action. Not yet are their services needed, but if the time comes they will be called and will respond.

At city hall and the courthouse the attitude seems to be that the problem is that of the State Highway Patrol. This we dispute. The problem is entirely within our own house, and we have sufficient authority in both city and county to bring about a solution. Yet this authority rests dormant while overloaded trucks speed through our midst and roar defiance. You haven't read lately about arrest of even a single truck driver, have you? You may not for a little while yet, but you will.

Our Chamber of Commerce is promoting a plan to widen the highway between Circleville and Chillicothe. The Herald withholds its support from this program until such a time as it is demonstrated that we can handle such highway and street traffic as we have now. We are not interested in doubling the truck traffic through town. We have entirely too much right now. For instance, between the hours of 7:30 and 9:30 Wednesday evening 98 trucks passed The Herald office on Court street And at one time during that period nine trucks were halted between Watt and High street waiting for a light to change. Not a single automobile in the block. No room for them.

Don't vent your anger against the drivers of the trucks. They must tool the rigs that are turned over to them. They have no choice at all. The real offenders are the truck owners. The trucks are noisy because gasoline mileage is better on a big motor with unconfined roar. Mufflers that will do an adequate job are available. Ask your garage man. Speed is necessary because of time limits placed on all hauls. If a driver fails to meet schedules he soon is out of a job. And the driver has nothing to say about the loads hauled. One went through here about ten days ago complaining because his load was 75 tons. Any motor would grunt and groan under such a load. The Ohio limit is 39 tons.

And what do you think those trucks are doing to your streets and highways? Plenty! And who is footing the bill? Maybe the ad run a few days ago by the Norfolk Western, a real taxpayer in Pickaway county, has the answer. It set forth that the general taxpayer is footing 48 percent of the cost of building and maintaining public roads; passenger car owners pay 34 1/2 percent; light truck owners 13 1/2 percent and HEAVY TRUCK OPERATORS pay only 4 percent.

No this problem is not alone that of the State Highway Patrol. It is even more the problem of our own law enforcement officers. And don't turn too attentive an ear to the immediate claim that we are short handed in peace officers. That is a fact, of course, but an occasional day of police activity on our streets and highways coupled with heavy fines would stir up sufficient fear to bring about the correction of a serious local problem. We do not need constant street and highway patrols. They are expensive and too often lose effectiveness rapidly. Just a determined raid now and then with no one except the officers knowing when it is coming would be sufficient.

And now, you disturbed folk, what are you going to do? Don't try to pat me on the back. It's sore already. Just ask your peace officers what they are going to do. And ask the question every time you see them. And if you don't see them often enough then remember that there are telephones in both city hall and the courthouse. The numbers are in the phone book.

And beginning as of right now, arrests growing out of violations by trucks will be page one news. And no arrests also will be page one news.

These Days

The Taft-Hartley Act is the law of the land and remains so until it is changed or renounced by Congress or is declared unconstitutional, in whole or in part, by the Supreme Court of the United States.

President Truman dislikes the Taft-Hartley Act and has sought to have it replaced by another law. This the Congress has thus far refused to do. In an orderly government, the law is the law, to be enforced whether a President likes it or not.

After all, if each law enforcement officer pursued his private predilections, we should have not a government of law but of whim culminating in anarchy.

However, the President appointed a fact-finding committee consisting of three men, Prof. Carroll R. Daugherty, Samuel Rosenman, and David L. Cole, to discover whether the demands of the CIO Steelworkers Union are justified. By this device, he bypassed the Taft-Hartley Act, which is obnoxious to him. He instructed this committee to report in 45 days "with recommendations as to fair and equitable terms of settlement." The Taft-Hartley Act, which permits the President to appoint a board, does not permit the board to make recommendations but only to state the facts so that the issues will be clarified.

By the President's method, three men are enabled, almost without recourse, to establish the pattern of American economy for the next generation. For as steel goes, so must go all American industry.

What may happen is that wages will be raised and the value of the dollar further depreciated. This comes at a time of unemployment, of reduced purchases, and when profits, no matter how large they may have been or appeared to be, are falling. The danger is that an unrealistic approach to our economy may damage it beyond repair, as British Socialism, even though protected by American aid, brings Britain every year closer to bankruptcy.

This is not a matter for violent propaganda either by the steel companies, who naturally do not favor the increase, or by the unions, who are intent upon making hay before the depression is too deep.

Two factors enter into this picture: One is the cost of living; the other is the ability to pay.

The cost of living rises as the real value of the dollar depreciates. As wages go up, prices go up and the value of the dollar goes down. The CIO view is that wages should go up but not prices and they have retained Robert Nathan to prove that that is possible.

The steel people contend that they cannot raise wages without being forced to produce steel at a loss—and when they have to do that, they will shut down. Some of the CIO leaders insist that that is unimportant. What they mean is that if the steel manufacturers shut down, the government can take over their plants or erect plants of its own.

The question of the ability to pay is a very involved one. Some contend that if an industry is earning plentifully, it should pay high wages and profits; that it should not set up reserves either for replacements or expansion or for bad years. In fact, they contend that should bad years come, industry can borrow from the government. It is deficit financing applied to business.

First Drug to Treat Dread TB

By HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

WITH the advent of streptomycin, medicine gained its first drug remedy against certain types of tuberculosis. And yet, useful as it is, streptomycin is only partially victorious against the germs which cause this dread disease. Although almost miraculously effective in some cases, it is, sadly enough, without value in others.

Streptomycin is one of our growing number of antibiotics, of which penicillin is perhaps the best known. These substances act to restore health either by checking the growth of germs or by killing them outright. The great amount of work done with streptomycin indicates that it is effective only in certain stages of the disease and against certain strains of tuberculosis germs.

Most Effective

Streptomycin is most effective where the disease itself is most active, in tubercular infections which are discovered early and which are fairly extensive and progressing rapidly. It is especially helpful in cases of acute tuberculous pneumonia which spreads rapidly through the lungs or in cases of longer standing where there are areas of great destruction in the lungs. Even in these cases streptomycin is not of indefinite benefit; after a few months, the tuberculous germs seem to become resistant to it. For this reason it is essential that streptomycin be given during the time when the germs are most susceptible to its action.

Streptomycin seems to be best used as an aid to other forms of treatment, and is particularly helpful when given after collapse therapy, that is, the injection of air into the chest cavity to collapse the lung. The lung may also be collapsed by surgical measures.

The use of streptomycin would not appear to be advisable in chronic cases of tuberculosis where a great deal of scar tissue has formed, nor does it as yet seem to be of any value when the condition has progressed to a late stage. It is also apparent that it should not be employed in early, slight infections.

Tuberculosis may also affect the larynx or voice box, the bronchi, the trachea or windpipe, as well as the bowels and ears. In these cases, streptomycin is of value and is given by injection into a muscle.

Draining Area

In the treatment of draining areas, such as the lymph glands in the neck which have been involved with tuberculosis, streptomycin may be employed, together with surgery.

In tuberculosis of the bones, joints and cartilages, the use of streptomycin is advised.

Tuberculosis may also affect the lining membrane over the brain. This condition is known as tuberculous meningitis and is at times cured with streptomycin if treatment is started early and continued over a period of from four to six months.

Thus, in many forms of tuberculosis, streptomycin has been found of value and even life-saving.

Evelyn Waugh, the writer, has been called by a critic "the most self-assured and unmovable Briton who ever visited Hollywood." Waugh himself relates, however, that one man once succeeded in destroying his self-assurance entirely—and that man was Benito Mussolini.

Homeward bound from reporting the invasion of Ethiopia, Waugh paused in Rome in hope of securing an audience with the Pope. "Only Mussolini can get you one at a time like this," he was told. The British embassy persuaded Mussolini to receive Waugh, and the latter practiced in advance the precise speech he proposed to make.

The long walk to the dictator's desk, with his footsteps re-echoing on the marble floor did Waugh in. Mussolini further gave him the "can't-you-see-I'm-signing-important-documents?" pantomime, before throwing down his quill and barking, "Well?" Waugh forgot every word he'd meant to say and heard a voice that he recognized with some surprise as his own declare, "Sir, Ethiopia will never be conquered!" That concluded the interview. CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT

IT'S ALL over, Marvell realized, as people rose around him and rose and moved down the aisle. He stood aside; should he try to follow him out to the chaste statuary on Chestnut Hill? He had never felt so aimless.

"Marvell..." It was Emily. She was not wearing black, but a light heather-colored suit and hat that reminded him of a faded lilac bush.

"Why, Emily," he said, taking her hand, waiting for the tears. "How nice of you to come," she said, as if he were one of those old-fashioned "at homes" when she and Elizabeth had kept their hats on in their own house all day.

As he murmured words of sympathy, she nodded her head, the lavender feathers in her hat rustling against her veil like dried plumes of lilac in the wind. What had become of her emotional overflow? Her eyes used to fill up as quickly as Alice Ben Bolt.

"Won't you drive back to the house with us? I want you to meet Bradford. He's at home."

"Thank you." He was rather dazed. Ben must have put her up to it.

They drove home together, Emily and a pleasant sister of hers from Cambridge, and Marvell. He listened while Emily talked and her amiable sister sighed and chuckled in sympathy. "There won't be a service at a formal one. Cremation, you see. That was his wish. He always planned for everything. He was ill only two days, you know. And I think that was what he minded most, to be taken so unawares."

Marvell nodded. He understood just how he must have felt.

"How is Katherine, Marvell? She must be a big girl. Is she still at home?"

"Very well, she wanted to come with me today but I..."

"Quite right of you. Let our children always remember us alive and well. Bradford is especially sensitive, so I insisted he remain at the house."

"It was last June, wasn't it, that she graduated? I'd like to have seen her in the play. Fanny sent me notices in the paper. Her first important occasion, it was very remiss of me not to have given her something in remembrance. I shall send her something now."

"Better make it a wedding present," said Marvell.

"Oh, how nice! Is it a Harvard boy?"

"He meant to be, but he went to war instead."

Emily wrinkled her nose. "Too bad, but aren't we grateful that we'll never have war again? Ah, here we are."

There was no creak on the door. The front hall was as dim as ever. The draft from the back hallway was as strong. He filed noiselessly up the wide plushy stairs guided by memory and the light plumes of Emily's hat. The amiable sister continued to the third floor, exchanging a few words about coming down later for tea.

Before he entered the library, Marvell knew that nothing would be changed. The red curtains were drawn back, the coal fire laid in the grate, the brass desk lamp was placed at the same angle. Not a picture, not a paper knife had been disturbed. Emily maneuvered him into an easy chair. He was terribly aware of Proctor. He might come in at any moment. He had been reading "The White Monkey" and had been called away. The book, with a marker, lay on the small table at Marvell's side.

"You look so well, Marvell. Ben and Fanny told me. But it is good to see for myself. You've changed. Then, we're all older, aren't we?"

Was it ten years or only yesterday that he had stood in this room, Marvell wondered.

"Bradford will be eleven next spring. Here is his picture." She lifted it from Proctor's desk. Marvell looked at the fair-haired plump little boy, exceedingly cheerful. It might have been the steel rimmed glasses that made him appear rather wise.

"Fine, he looks older, though." "He goes to a progressive school," she said proudly. "He's very talented."

"For what?" Marvell was interested.

"Why—for everything now." She tried to be modest. "I mean he picks out his own tunes on the piano. He makes pictures. He loves color." She wrinkled her nose at the room. "He never liked this, it's so dark and still."

"But he hasn't made any special choice yet and I wanted to talk to you before he comes down to tea."

Marvell turned his head toward the door, surely he had heard her handle turn.

"He has no head for figures or detail. He is so absorbed by what he sees and hears and touches. I believe he will be an artist. At ten, you can be pretty sure what the twig will be. Don't you agree?"

Marvell smiled, not without a touch of superiority. Emily had a few things yet to learn. Wait till the boy was eighteen, he might make a master plumber and knock the breath out of her.

"I don't want him to go into business. Nor even to Harvard. I want him to find his native atmosphere now, day by day, not to be pushed into it at twenty."

Marvell had never thought Emily so observing. "What do you mean to do?"

"Next year, I wouldn't take him from school now. I'm going to take him abroad, to France."

What was the affinity between Back Bay and France, Marvell wanted to know, thinking of Nedda and Amory.

"Because—now you mustn't laugh—he won't be self-conscious about his talent. Even if it is a small one." She looked as if she were trusting him with a secret.

"What do you think?" Marvell was fidgety. He had no opinion; even if he had, he would never be bold enough to give it. Not any more, he thought grimly. "It sounds fine."

"You remember how Father Barlow arranged everything?" Her gray suede pumps rubbed the carpet a little nervously. When Marvell made no reply, she went on. "Trust me, you know, for the heirs, managed by Ben and some bank, or was it a judge..."

We thought, Ben and I, that you might represent him in the business. You would be representing Kit, too. Her share, I mean. Abbot need a partner. Then you might buy him out, Bradford, I mean, later and..."

"That's impossible!" He sprang to his feet, the hoarseness of his voice startled him, but not Emily. She kept right on.

"I was going to write you, but when you came all the way down—Ben will be here a little later. There's nothing like a talk face to face."

"Emily," he began. He clasped his hands behind his back. They had never been so cold and damp. "Ten years ago was a different matter. But now—I've slipped back. I kept up with new developments. I couldn't compete with the standards in the field."

She shook her head in reproof. "You wouldn't do manual work. You'd direct. You've always brought out the best in the men." She remembered hearing that somewhere—as a matter of fact, it had been Marvell's favorite boast. "I didn't imagine you'd say 'yes' right off. You're supposed to think it over," she laughed. "That makes it more legal."

"Abbot—" he got no further. There was nothing to say. He could not do it again. He could not repeat the same pattern. He'd be starting out with a handicap again, as he had at first, way behind the others. Abbot would look for them. I didn't come all this way to begin again, he wanted to cry out.

"Abbot is a fixture, Marvell, he doesn't do much now. Think about it. Do. I'll see about tea. I left the maid upstairs with Bradford. We'll be down in a minute."

He tried to stop her. His mouth was dry, his throat tight. She had left him but he was not alone. He was back where he had started, trembling, panicked. He could see Proctor, gray and pale before the fireplace, thrusting Kit upon him with that terrible thin smile. "Why do I have to go through this again, why do I?" When he spoke, he recognized the emptiness of the room. He threw out his hands in a final appeal. "But I don't have to decide, I want..."

He heard a faint movement behind him. He did not dare to turn, but his imagination did not falter. The little girl with the black button shoes and the white stockings legs was watching him, looking as wise and admonishing as only eight could look. Then, he knew that the decision had been made, long ago, perhaps that very afternoon Kit had discovered him here. At last he had to accept.

The knob turned and the door opened slowly. He heard Emily say, "Here is someone you have never seen before, Bradford." Marvell took a deep breath before turning to face them.

Job Of 'Mrs. Fire Chief' Is No Bed Of Roses, Mrs. Talmer Wise Says

She Attends No Blazes

What's it like to be the Fire Chief's wife?

According to Mrs. Talmer Wise of Circleville, it is not a bed of roses.

There are no days off, meals have to be served at irregular hours, sleep is interrupted—rudely interrupted—and there's endless concern for the chief's safety.

Mrs. Wise has been "Mrs. Fire Chief" for 25 years. It was July 16, 1924 at 11 o'clock in the morning that Talmer Wise was first made fire chief.

At 11 o'clock that night, the Goeller broom factory caught fire. Mrs. Wise recalls that Chief Wise was gone all night on that fire-fighting expedition. She grew so nervous that some neighbors drove her down to the fire to prove to her that the chief was safe.

She has been to one fire since—a fire on South Court street and she got "bawled out" for going to that one.

The fire chief definitely does not approve of people going to fires out of curiosity and for the thrill of it, she reports.

Mrs. Wise has far more important responsibilities during a fire. Living at 146 East Franklin, just across from the engine house, the fire chief's wife takes over while the firemen are fighting flames. Even in the dead of night, Mrs. Wise slips over to the engine house, closes the doors, sets the indicator to receive the next fire call and answers the telephone many times.

She denies that she is "acting fire chief" during Wise's absence.

"I'm only helping out" she said. "After all, somebody has to be there."

Mrs. Wise receives 50 cents a fire for her time spent in the engine house whether she is there minutes or hours. This she turns over to her Sunday School class.

Mrs. Wise never goes back to sleep until the fire is over and the chief is home. She is never afraid for herself.

One night a man, who was intoxicated, came to the engine house, wanting to drive the rural fire truck. He insisted on taking the truck out, Mrs. Wise finally persuaded him to "get going."

Another time—about three in morning—Mrs. Wise was called to the engine house in her robe and slippers. Another wanderer, also deep in his cups, thought he was encountering a fortune teller. He—not his fortune—was told—and fast.

She has never learned to take the chief's job casually. She always worries about him although Wise himself plays down the heroics and insists that he and his men use good judgement and take all necessary precautions.

The chief goes to bed each night in his clothes, all of them except trousers and boots. He dons a freshly ironed shirt on retiring and when the fire buzzer rings, he's dressed—boots, hat and all—in less than sixty seconds.

Mrs. Wise has many interests beside the fire department. She likes to read and embroider and crochet, but declares she never finds time to do any of them. She is a notary public and an adviser on income taxes. January, February and March are busy months for her.

Mrs. Wise likes working with numbers. She once was a bookkeeper for a local canning factory.

Married in 1923, Chief and Mrs. Wise have two sons, Jack employed by the Defenbaugh Funeral Home and Mac who is with the police department.

"For all the risk and work and danger, isn't it a very exciting and rewarding job to be the fire chief's wife?" Mrs. Wise was asked.

"Oh, yes, but I'm looking forward to the day when Talmer can retire. Twenty-five years is a long time," she replied.

Job Of 'Mrs. Fire Chief' Is No Bed Of Roses, Mrs. Talmer Wise Says

She Attends No Blazes

What's it like to be the Fire Chief's wife?
According to Mrs. Talmer Wise of Circleville, it is not a bed of roses.
There are no days off, meals have to be served at irregular hours, sleep is interrupted—rudely interrupted—and there's endless concern for the chief's safety.
Mrs. Wise has been "Mrs. Fire Chief" for 25 years. It was July 16, 1924 at 11 o'clock in the morning that Talmer Wise was first made fire chief.
At 11 o'clock that night, the Goeller broom factory caught fire. Mrs. Wise recalls that Chief Wise was gone all night on that fire-fighting expedition. She grew so nervous that some neighbors drove her down to the fire to prove to her that the chief was safe.
She has been to one fire since—a fire on South Court street and she got "bawled out" for going to that one.
The fire chief definitely does not approve of people going to fires out of curiosity and for the thrill of it, she reports.
Mrs. Wise has far more important responsibilities during a fire. Living at 146 East Franklin, just across from the engine house, the fire chief's wife takes over while the firemen are fighting flames. Even in the dead of night, Mrs. Wise slips over to the engine house, closes the doors, sets the indicator to receive the next fire call and answers the telephone many times.
She denies that she is "acting fire chief" during Wise's absence.
"I'm only helping out" she said. "After all, somebody has to be there."
Mrs. Wise receives 50 cents a fire for her time spent in the engine house whether she is there minutes or hours. This she turns over to her Sunday School class.
Mrs. Wise never goes back to sleep until the fire is over and the chief is home. She is never afraid for herself.
One night a man, who was intoxicated, came to the engine house, wanting to drive the rural fire truck. He insisted on taking the truck out. Mrs. Wise finally persuaded him to "get going."
Another time—about three in morning—Mrs. Wise was called to the engine house in her robe and slippers. Another wanderer, also deep in his cups, thought he was encountering a fortune teller. He—not his fortune—was told—and fast.
She has never learned to take the chief's job casually. She always worries about him although Wise himself plays down the heroics and insists that he and his men use good judgement and take all necessary precautions.
The chief goes to bed each night in his clothes, all of them except trousers and boots. He dons a freshly ironed shirt on retiring and when the fire buzzer rings, he's dressed—boots, hat and all—in less than sixty seconds.
Mrs. Wise has many interests beside the fire department. She likes to read and embroider and crochet, but declares she never finds time to do any of them.
She is a notary public and an adviser on income taxes. January, February and March are busy months for her.
Mrs. Wise likes working with numbers. She once was a book-keeper for a local canning factory.
Married in 1923, Chief and Mrs. Wise have two sons, Jack employed by the Defenbaugh Funeral Home and Mac who is with the police department.
"For all the risk and work and danger, isn't it a very exciting and rewarding job to be the fire chief's wife?" Mrs. Wise was asked.
"Oh, yes, but I'm looking forward to the day when Talmer

Bond Forfeited After City Race With Policemen

Herbert Holbrook, 22, of Circleville Route 3, forfeited a $20 bond in mayor's court Friday for choosing the wrong way home.

Police Chief William F. McCrady said he and State Highway Patrolman Clyde Wells had been sitting in the patrol car near the police station late Thursday "when Holbrook whizzed by."

The chief said Holbrook was travelling west on Franklin street when he "shot" across Court street. The lawmen agreed he must have been "travelling about 50 or 60 miles per hour."

Wells launched the patrol car in pursuit of the Holbrook auto, stopping it only after a chase of nearly two miles, during which, according to McCrady, Holbrook had failed to observe two stop signs.

Holbrook was brought back to the police station and released on the bond for reckless operation.

Compensation

Lost By Woman Who Shuns Job

A person who refuses an offer of work for which he is reasonably fitted because that job pays considerably less than a similar job held previously held may not be eligible for unemployment benefits, the Unemployment Compensation Board of Review has ruled.

C. C. Thomas, local BUC manager, said the board's unanimous ruling came in the case of an Akron woman who had refused to accept a job as a bookkeeper at $215 a month after having been laid off as a general bookkeeper for two concerns which had paid her a total monthly salary of $300.

The board pointed out that under the law, a benefit claimant "must accept any offer of work for which she is reasonably fitted if the remuneration for such work is not substantially less than the prevailing rate for similar work in the community."

Testimony revealed that the local prevailing rate for the type of work offered in this case was $185. The fact that the woman had previously been paid more and had held a more responsible job, the board said, had no bearing on her benefit rights.

In declaring the claimant ineligible for benefits, the board cited that section of the law which denies benefits to any person who has "refused to accept an offer of work for which he is reasonably fitted." There was no question, the board asserted, but that the claimant had turned down a job for which she was fitted by training and experience.

2 Suspects Held In $300,000 Lumber Blaze

COLUMBUS, Aug. 6—Columbus police today held two suspects in the $300,000 Elephant Lumber Co. fire, which they say "might have been set intentionally."

They arrested the son of a night watchman at the plant yesterday afternoon, and said they are continuing the questioning of a packing company employee already held.

The first suspect, they said, still cannot account for his activities for an hour and a half preceding the pre-dawn blaze that destroyed six of the company's eight, buildings, four railroad cars, four trucks and huge piles of lumber early Thursday.

The fire caused injury to seven firemen.

Battalion Chief Harry Caldwell said yesterday that a carelessly discarded cigarette could have been responsible, but he did not discount the possibility of deliberate arson.

Locals Enter Stock In State Fair Events

At least six Pickaway County musicians have entered animals in the coming Ohio State Fair, slated to begin in Columbus Aug. 27.

The local entries consist of swine, dairy cattle and beef cattle, according to a list of exhibitors, while more local entries are expected before the Aug. 10 deadline.

Local exhibitors named to date, along with their type of entry, are William Richards, Circleville Route 4, Guernsey; Charles Miller and Sons, New Holland Route 2, Durco Jersey swine; Albert Weifell, Orient Route 2, Angus steer; John Moats and son, Mt. Sterling Route 2, cattle; Harley H. Runkle, Ashville Route 2, Yorkshire swine; and John F. Riddle, Orient Route 2, Guernsey.

The local instrumentalists are to join almost 200 other Ohio musicians for practice sessions a week prior to the fair opening.

Man Is Held As 1944 AWOL

DAYTON, Aug. 6—A Dayton man was held by military police today, accused of stowing away on a U. S. ship and going AWOL while in the Army at Liege, Belgium, five years ago.

Lewis Leo Henry, 27, was picked up by MPs and Dayton police yesterday when he parked his car in front of his mother's house.

He is accused of stowing away on the ship in 1944 and coming to Los Angeles, from which he returned to his hometown.

Since his return July a year ago, Henry bought a car, and police used its description to track him down.

Fair Closed

GREENVILLE, Aug. 6 — The Darke County Fair is under quarantine today, because of 22 cases of polio already reported. Officials ordered cancellation of the 94th annual event yesterday.

GOTHAM FORGET TAJ MAHAL?

Super Garden Seen Ahead If Hitches All Iron Out

CHICAGO, Aug. 6 — Madison Square Garden, as none save a low contemptible cad would deny, is a sterling and most respectable organization, made up of men whose wit is infinite and wisdom immense.

But that only adds to one's inability to explain certain tidings of ill-omen in connection with the Garden's big, beautiful super-garden which — almost any year now—might cease being a big, beautiful blueprint. That's the same one they hired the Hotel Astor ballroom to announce in detail four years ago.

Then, as now, it was to rise magically from the squalor of New York's tenement area, a thing of rare, breath-taking beauty that was deemed almost certain to make Tenth Avenue forget the Taj Mahal.

It was, indeed, a very splendid project which—as it apparently turns out—had hardly anything against it. Only, in fact, a technical hitch or two.

FOR ONE THING, owing to an unfortunate oversight, somebody neglected to buy the property. For another, it appears now that New York City won't let them build there, anyhow.

Aside from that, Madison Square Garden is said to be proceeding with negotiations in very masterly fashion.

Outside of these complications, however, everything is splendid. The Garden might like to know, of course, whether it's now running a dynasty—or the ante-room for the Chicago Stadium.

But, since the Jim Morris of Chicago own or control a good portion of both properties, nobody's going to be ill-bred enough to inquire too pointedly about that.

Besides, the Norris-International Boxing coalition has been

Walsh, Riddle In Player Deal

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 6—Right-hander Jim Walsh reports today to the Pittsburgh Pirates for their game with the Phillies, and Hurler Elmer Riddle takes his place with Indianapolis of the American Association.

The Bucs made the swap last night, buying Walsh for an undisclosed amount of cash and optioning Riddle. Walsh has won 15 and dropped four for the Indians, while Riddle has a record of 1-8 for the Pirates.

Lausche, Louis Get Invites

CLEVELAND, Aug. 6 — Gov. Frank J. Lausche and Former Heavyweight Boxing Champion Joe Louis have been invited to compete in an interfraternal golf tournament Aug. 12 being sponsored by the B'Nai B'Rith Inter-Local Council of Circleville.

Representatives of the Al Sirat Grotto, Knights of Columbus and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are collaborating in the tournament.

Ex-Senator Shows Power
In Return To Washington

NEW YORK, Aug. 6 — Great events occur in Washington almost daily, but seldom does one get a chance to see an ousted Senator return to the capital and stand his former colleagues on their ears.

But that's exactly what happened last night. They threw a party in honor of Chicago White Sox shortstop Luke Appling but it was Mickey Haefner who made off with the cake.

"Ole Lucius Luke," who admits to 40 years, tied Rabbit Maranville's mark of 2,153 games played at short. The durable infielder was honored in pre-game ceremonies and then celebrated by bashing out two singles in the ball game. But that's Appling.

The returning ex-Senator stole the show, though. Left-Hander Mickey Haefner was on the mound for the Pale Hose, the same mound Owner Clark Griffith said Mickey would never more tread upon in the uniform of the Senators.

GRIFTH SAID Haefner was "in different" and didn't care to win. But care he did last night and he set the Senators down with seven scattered hits as the White Sox won 4 to 1.

Boston's red-hot Red Sox made it six in a row by pasting the Tigers 9 to 0 behind Jack Kramer. Dom DiMaggio hit safely in his 32nd consecutive game and Vern Stephens tied Ted Williams for the major league lead in homers by belting his 26th.

Cleveland eked out a 3 to 2 win over Philadelphia and Alex Kellner to stay within three games of the Yankees, who whipped the Browns twice in an afternoon doubleheader, 10 to 2 and 10 to 5.

Brooklyn and St. Louis continued their cut-throat battle in the National League.

The Dodgers won their sixth in a row by edging Cincinnati 6 to 4 last night, but the Red Birds maintained their half-game lead when Gerry Staley shut out the Giants 2 to 0.

PITTSBURGH'S Bill Werle and Philadelphia's Schoolboy Rowe hooked up in a tight pitcher's duel that was decided by a ninth inning error.

The Pirates won out 1 to 0 when Shortstop Grady Hatfield made a wide throw to first base with a runner on third.

The stumbling and staggering Boston Braves, looking like anything but last year's champions, lost another. The Cubs pasted the Beantowners 8 to 3 in a day game. Hank Sauer hit his 23rd homerun for Chicago.

'East-West' Tiff
Is Prospect
In Hambletonian

GOSHEN, N. Y., Aug. 6—An "east-west" battle appears in prospect for next week's running of the second richest Hambletonian in history.

Four Midwestern horses and two Eastern contenders loom as near-equal choices in the 24th renewal of the trotting classic for three-year-olds to be raced at Good Time Park's track Aug. 10.

The jackpot in this year's Kentucky Derby of harness racing will be $67,000, a purse topped only by the 1926 inaugural which went for $73,451.

The huge stake plus the promise of a "wide open" race is expected to result in the second largest field in Hambletonian history with 18 horses going to the post.

Heading the Midwest entry in the classic is the probable favorite, Bangway, owned by Saunders Mills of Toledo, winner of three major three-year-old stakes this year. Bangway is expected to receive competition from three other Midwestern entries.

O. L. Mears' Guy Ambassador, also from Toledo, Martha Doyle, owned by A. L. Derby of Wichita, Kans., and the Hayes Fair Acres' entry of Scotch Pal and Atomic Maid, Duquoin, Ill., are also rated highly.

Representing the best in the east will be C. W. Phellis' Miss Tilly, Greenwich, Conn., and Coldstream Stud's Volume, from Lexington, Ky.

Fishing Better
In Area, Game
Protector Says

Local fishermen should be able to tote home stringers heavy with fish this weekend, according to Clarence Francis, Pickaway County game protector.

Francis pointed out that all but two local streams are in "good" shape Saturday and that "fine catches" have been taken from the streams this week.

The game man said a fisherman from Lancaster caught two four to five-pound blue cats from Big Darby creek near Fox this week, along with a 16-pound carp.

Francis said the angler had fished the stream all night, and reported that he had caught all three fish at about daybreak. He had been using nightcrawlers and soft craws, said Francis.

Meanwhile, good catches of bass and rock bass are being taken from the same creek, Francis added.

He said that all local small streams were clear and good, Darby was "clear enough to plug" around the riffles and that Deer creek "is a trifle cloudy, but clearing up nicely."

Most of the local game fish catches have been taken on soft craws and minnows, he said.

'River Bass' Take Rather Low,
But Young Huckster Is Doing OK

Although the waters of the Scioto River behind the Esmeralda Canning company are teeming with huge "river bass" the "take" was reported meagre Friday night.

Meagre, that is, for the fishermen who crowded the banks of the stream with their lines moving only by the aid of the current.

But Freddy Cooper, a young huckster who paraded the banks with a box of candy bars, found the "fishing" worthwhile.

Cooper said his business was booming. He pointed out that he regularly peddled his wares in the canning plant through the day, but "whenever I see some cars down near the river I can count on a few more sales. I sold 24 boxes of candy Wednesday," he confided.

The young trader, who is all of 12 or 13, pointed out that he had been around the banks of the Scioto for "years" when the carp begin to swarm around the waste corn discarded from the canning plant, but that this year was "poor fishing" so far.

ONLY ONE CARP was taken from the waters behind the plant Friday afternoon and evening, he said, lifting a one-pounder on a stringer.

"But they really took them Wednesday night, when the plant first opened," he added.

He said that more than a dozen "good" carp were taken in the opener.

"Old-timers" in the business of fishing for the "river hogs" behind the cannery report that after the initial night the going is slow until the waste corn sours.

They say that the corn should be beginning to sour within a few days, and that when it does ripen, the fish practically "will come out of the water" to nip a bait.

Leahy Cites Grid
Game's Values

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Aug. 6—Notre Dame Football Coach Frank Leahy, told the assembled fellow mentors at the Hot Springs gridiron clinic that football was one of the best ways to promote Americanism and thwart Communism.

Leahy departed from his lecture on football tactics yesterday to tell his listeners that they had the best opportunity to teach principles of Democracy. The right to play football should be based on a boy's ability to play, he said, and not on race, creed, color or background.

New York Orders 'Must' Insurance Of All Boxers

NEW YORK, Aug. 6 — New York today became the first state in the nation to order compulsory insurance on the life and limb of all boxers.

An announcement by Col. Eddie Egan, chairman of the New York State Athletic Commission, declared that after Sept. 1 all promoters must pay a premium of two dollars for every fighter in every bout. Reimbursement for injuries will be up to $500, while in the case of accidental death $2,500 will be paid to the estate of the dead fighter.

The group policy, which will cover the entire state, will be issued by the Continental Casualty Company. Egan said promoters will be permitted to take the cost of premium payments "from the top" of the receipts of each show; the premiums, in other words, will be classed in the same category with stadium rent and taxes.

Egan described the insurance plan as "the first step in the program being carried out by the commission for a complete revision of regulations for the protecting of the licensed competitor." In the near future, he added, "the commission expects to provide for entirely new medical procedures and standards."

OSU Prof Wins Crown As Top Golfing Duffer

GROVEPORT, Aug. 6 — Ohio State Accounting Prof. Theodore P. Herrick Jr. won't have to use his head for figures like the rest of the contestants in the district hackers handicap, 'cause he's wearing a crown on it today.

The crown is for being king of the duffers in Central Ohio, and he got it because of his 77-90 which—minus his 36-stroke handicap—makes 131 for the two-day, 36-hole tourney here.

The professor accounted for the neat 77 Thursday, and when you add that 18-stroke handicap, that was phenomenal. Then yesterday, he scored that 90 minus 18—72.

Herrick was followed, not too closely, by divot-digger John L. Tipton of York Country Club with 92-93—135.

On the other hand, "duffer of duffers" honors were carted off by huffing Carl Hicks, a native of Groveport, who took his comptometer and counted his scores, which were 103-106—209.

But maybe that's not fair, because that leaves out the handicap angle.

But there's no mistaking the score that Al Gruening of Groveport hit on hole four when he took 10 strokes at the ball for high individual "honors."

Tinkers Assure Selves Toga In Softball Loop

Tinks softball team assured itself first place in Circleville Night Softball League finals in Ted Lewis Park Friday by posting a 2-0 shutout over Ashville.

The Tinkers now hold the league leadership with only two losses chalked against them to date and with only one more game yet to play. Other contenders to the league championship have accumulated three losses in the loop so far.

The leaders opened their Friday contest against Ashville by tallying a single run in the initial stanza, following through with a final marker in the fourth for the 2-0 count.

Stillman Morrison, Tinker moundsman, hurled 13 strikeouts during the match, allowed only two safeties and permitted but one base on balls.

Line score of the shutout follows:

Ashville	000	000	0-0	2	0

Agent Says Fertilizers Usually Make Soil Get-Up-And-Go

Farms Need Chemical Lift, Claim

Professor Quoted On Requirements

Organic matter gives farm soil the "get up and go" for producing bigger yields and higher quality crops, but organic matter alone cannot do the whole job; it generally needs to be reinforced by fertilizers according to Larry A. Best, Pickaway County agricultural agent.

The agent quotes Prof. Emil Truog, of the University of Wisconsin, who explains it this way:

"Fresh organic matter contains elements needed for nourishing plants. As decomposition proceeds, these elements are released in forms suitable for new plant growth. In the decomposition process, favorable conditions are produced for making available the nutrient elements contained in soil minerals.

"But to say—as does the 'organic school'—that chemical fertilizers such as phosphate and potash should not be used, is pure bunkum. These fertilizers are needed to make up for the inevitable lack of nutritive elements which organic matter alone cannot supply.

"Evidence almost without end, shows clearly that the use of mineral fertilizers on depleted soils promotes the growth of crops which have superior food values."

TRUOG POINTS out that while the fertility and soil organic matter supply of gardens and other small areas may be maintained by the use of composts and animal manures, such practices are not feasible where large farm acreages are involved. It is impossible to prepare and apply the enormous amounts of compost that would be needed for the average farm.

"Fortunately, in general farming," he says, "it is both convenient and profitable to follow a crop rotation that will provide the necessary organic matter. This can be supplied in the form of plowed-under legumes, crop residues, stubble, stalks and roots and barnyard manure.

"All that is required to make the system work is the proper use of lime and fertilizers containing phosphorus and potash and sometimes nitrogen. The nitrogen problem is a high lime and mineral fertility. This assures a luxuriant growth of superior deep-rooted legumes such as alfalfa and the clovers."

Higher Prices Paid Farmers For Milk

COLUMBUS, Aug. 6—Ohio farmers received two cents more per hundred pounds of milk during June than they did during May.

The monthly dairy report, released today, showed that the average June price paid producers in 21 principal Ohio fluid markets was $3.39.

Although two cents higher than the May average, the June price was $1.44 less than a year ago.

The average price paid in June by Ohio milk manufacturing plants was $2.56 for 3.5 per cent butterfat milk, the same as in May but $1.55 less than a year earlier.

Production during June showed a decrease from May of 10 pounds to an average of 264 pounds of milk per day per producer. However, the production was still 25 pounds per day higher than June of 1948.

Ohio produced an estimated 7,300,000 pounds of creamery butter in June, seven per cent less than May but 11 per cent greater than a year ago. Ohio's American cheese production was four per cent greater than in May.

Ice cream production in June rose 15 per cent from May and was about the same as in June of last year.

Mother Loses In Race With Polio

COLUMBUS, Aug. 6—Licking and Franklin County sheriffs deputies lost a race with polio and death Thursday.

When it became doubtful whether James Owens, 30, of Newark would live, Children's hospital authorities in Columbus sent out a rush call for his mother. Sirens screamed as two cruisers raced for the Licking-Franklin County line—one from Columbus and the other from Newark bearing Mrs. Owens.

She changed cars at the county line and was at her son's bedside within less than an hour from the time when the call went out.

But she was too late. Owens, admitted to the hospital Aug. 1, suffering from polio, had died.

"You inressid in wrestling?" the mash-and-maul artist asked pleasantly.

"What makes you think people don't bet on musical comedy shows?" I asked. "But never mind, go on."

"Only place wrestling is crooked sometimes is South America," the Cobra continued. "Frinstance, Ecuador, where tree months ago I ween plenny money by losing."

"I am amaze," I said. "Is funny story," said Ezaklios. "Day before I wrestle, Aloicio Macombo, champ of Quito, Senor Ramon, matchmaker, walk een my hotel room. Ramon is beeg shot in Ecuador."

"POOT ON SHOW twanny, twanny-five minoot," he says. "Then Aloicio weel take fall for you. Mak it bear-hug an' body-press."

"I cannot believe ears. I say: 'You want me to beat champ?' 'He say: 'That is only way you gat return match. Mak sure no mistake. I bet plenny for you to win."

"Night of match, when I walk down aisle, crowd heave bottles, is boo, an' kill me. When Aloicio comes in, they chuck flowers an' cheer."

Picket Lines Drawn Up By Teamsters

YOUNGSTOWN, Aug. 6—Picket lines were set up at wholesale distributors' warehouses in Youngstown today as Local 377 of the AFL-Chauffeurs, Teamsters and Helpers Union struck against six of eight distributors.

The Steel City Milling Company and John Ambrosola and Co., have signed temporary agreements, calling for undetermined pay increases.

Horace Vokoun, federal conciliator, made a last minute attempt to keep grocery truck drivers, warehousemen and helpers on the job until another meeting could be held, but his efforts were futile.

Drivers are making $1.18 at the present time and are asking $1.50. The company has offered a three-cent increase up to Jan. 1, 1950, and two cents more from Jan. 1 to June 1, 1950.

Six Arrested In Gambling Raid

LORAIN, Aug. 6—Six men were held in Lorain jail today after they were arrested in a police raid on an alleged race betting shop in the downtown section of the city.

Vice Squad Chief Joseph Gethin and Patrolman Michael Demyan made the raid after the locked front door was broken down. More than 15 persons escaped from the shop.

Gethin and Demyan said that race sheets for all tracks, race entries for the day, tally sheets listing bets and racing forms were found in the place.

Marijuana Haul Termed Biggest

CLEVELAND, Aug. 6—A marijuana haul, described as the biggest since 1940, was made early today when suburban Euclid police arrested two Lexington, Ky., men in an auto.

Lieut. Gerald J. Sullivan and Plainclothes Patrolman Kelleth Gibb, who made the arrests, said they discovered 15 pounds of marijuana in the auto.

The suspects, 36 and 38, were picked up in an old auto about four hours after Sullivan had been tipped off that they were on their way out of the city.

Excise Tax Cut Out-Truman

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6—President Truman said today that Congress will give no consideration this year to repeal of wartime excise taxes.

This was a reversal of the President's recommendation in his recent mid-year economic report to Congress. In that report, Mr. Truman recommended that the excise tax on the transportation of goods be repealed. He did not recommend repeal of numerous other excise levies.
